"THE LAND IS BRIGHT"A 13-week series of radio documentaries on B.C. history, replacing "CBC Stage"

A series of 13 dramatized radio documentaries on the history of British Columbia from the time of Quadra to the present day begins Sunday, May 4, at 10:00 p.m. The series, presented as part of the CBC's contribution to the B.C. centenary, is written by the B.C. author, magistrate and fisherman, Roderick Haig-Brown and is called The Land is Bright. The title is taken from a poem by Arthur Hugh Clough—

*"And not by eastern windows only,
When daylight comes, comes in the light;
In front the sun climbs slow, how slowly,
But westward, look, the land is bright."*

Roderick Haig-Brown was born in England and came to Canada in his teens. He has written books on fishing in British Columbia and several novels.

The story of the white man in the Pacific north-west coast of what is now Canada begins with obscure myths and rumours. When the explorers following Christopher Columbus discovered the Americas were not India and the legend grew up that somewhere a huge waterway crossed the new continent through which European traders could more easily reach the East. Explorations to the south soon disproved the existence of any such Strait, between the Mexican Gulf and the stormy Magellan Straits, but for centuries the legend persisted that the Strait of Anian (as it came to be called) existed to the north.

The legendary Strait stimulated exploration for two reasons: the English and other Europeans wanted to use the Strait as a gateway to the East; the Spaniards wanted to fortify it so neither the English (nor anyone else) could use it.

Many men claimed to have sailed up the west coast of the Americas and found the Straits. Juan de Fuca, for instance, in 1596 told an Englishman named Michael Lok that he discovered the Strait at latitude 48 degrees north. He said he sailed through it and almost (Please turn to page 8)

"COSI FAN TUTTE"("Women Are Like That")

"This was television achieving its highest purpose," said Variety, the American "show-bizz" weekly, of an NBC-TV production of Mozart's Così fan tutte. "It was a memorable performance that simply could not be outdone."

A kinerecording of this performance of the comic opera will be presented this Saturday from 1:00 to 3:00 p.m. on CBWT.

The two lovers who don disguises and almost succeed in winning each other's fiancées will be played by tenor John Alexander and baritone Mac Morgan. The fiancées are played by Phyllis Curtin and Frances Bible, described by Time as "as pretty a brace of slim beauties as ever taunted a gallant." James Pease sings the role of Don Alfonso, the cynical old bachelor who challenges the two young lovers to test their fiancées' fidelity, and the maid Despina will be portrayed by Helen George. The opera will be sung in English by this all-American cast.

The libretto for Così fan tutte ("Women Are Like That") was written by Lorenzo da Ponte, poet-dramatist friend of the great Casanova—whose exploits he could match. Nevertheless, his success as a poet in various cities of Europe was tempered by the frequent need for flight from unpleasant circumstances.

After a trip to England in search of employment in his career as dramatist and poet—a venture which failed as many others had—da Ponte tried various business careers in the United States. These too failed, although he was honoured in New York as a man of letters, and then he turned to teaching Italian and Dante's poetry at Columbia University. Schemes (Please turn to page 7)

Study of Retirement Sunday on "Perspective"

Perspective this Sunday (CBWT-12:30 p.m.) examines some of the problems which come with old age and retirement as experienced by three men, each with a different approach to the "golden age."

One man finds bitter loneliness, another decides to plan for retirement by discovering new interests, and the third man is surprised by the fact that the anticipated happiness of idle days does not last.

A number of well-known Canadian actors are featured in this National Film Board production. Script is by John Wyllie, and Gordon Burwash was director.

"Peacetime Arsenal"

Sunday night on Our Special Speaker and in an article due to appear shortly in the Queen's Quarterly, Dr. Alistair M. Taylor appeals for a peacetime version of a plan like the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan which was in operation during the Second Great War. He would like to see a large-scale scientific and technical training program concerned first with "training large numbers of technicians brought to Canada from underdeveloped countries." Secondly, he suggests that "by concentrating this program in Canada itself, we can extend plant facilities in time to cope with our own future technological demands."

A former chief editor of the United Nations Yearbook, Dr. Taylor served as press and political officer with the U.N. Commission for Indonesia in Java and The Hague. He assisted in drafting reports to the Security Council, and since resuming his duties at U.N. Headquarters has specialized in the activities of the Trusteeship Council and the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly. The author of many articles, Dr. Taylor is currently writing The Sixtieth Member - The United Nations and the Indonesian Question, to be published shortly by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Sunday night's talk is entitled Needed: A Peacetime Arsenal of Democracy (CBW-9:20 p.m., CBK-8:20 p.m., CBX-7:20 p.m.).

"The Newcomer"

An "Explorations" film about Indians in the city

One of the most pressing, perplexing and yet fascinating problems facing Canadians today had its beginnings approximately 400 years ago when white men began arriving in North America. Then, the problem of both whites and Indians was mere survival; today, although the survival of the Indian is still in question, the problem is far more complex.

The crisis of today is the existence of the Indian in the white men's cities and culture and way of life. Because of a tremendously increasing population on the reservations (the Indians' birthrate is higher than any other ethnic group in Canada) many Indians are finding it absolutely imperative to leave their sanctuaries and seek a living in another world. And because of their lack of preparation for outside life—a lack in education (most never get beyond grade six), in skills of any sort except the "strong arm" of the bush, in comprehension of or familiarity with the different society and customs—many of them are utterly bewildered, confused, and run afoul of the law (usually through ignorance and passivity), find poor companions in the gutters of the slums, or discover, like many whites, that liquor makes a good escape from problems.

But this problem cannot be escaped, nor will ignoring it cause it to go away, for whites and Indians are being forced to confront one another as never before in modern history, and the possibility of escape behind the barricade of the reservation no longer exists. The problem itself is hard to define, for the conflict of two ways of life involves many things, and the solution or solutions are equally difficult.

On Explorations this Monday, May 5 (10:45 p.m. on CBWT) this situation will be explored by a trio of Indian actors — Johnny Macpherson, Argus Summer and Rose Bear—under the direction of Felix Lazarus of CBC Winnipeg. The program was filmed in Winnipeg, where the problem of Indians arriving from northern Mani-

Prairie Symphonies On CBW, CBK, CBX

The symphony orchestras of Edmonton, Regina, Calgary and Saskatoon will each present a half-hour broadcast during May, starting this week. Prairie Symphonies is scheduled for Tuesdays on CBX (6:30 p.m.), CBK and CBW (7:30 p.m.).

The programs were recorded earlier at public concerts given in the orchestras' home cities. The Edmonton and Calgary orchestras performed in the identical Alberta Jubilee Auditoriums in the two cities.

Ambitious programs have been chosen by all orchestras, and such works as Tchaikovsky's Pathétique Symphony, Borodin's Polovtsian Dances, and excerpts from Strauss' Der Rosenkavalier are included in the broadcasts. The Saskatoon Symphony will be heard in the premiere performance of Summer Suite by the Saskatoon-born composer Robert Fleming. This work was commissioned by the orchestra through a grant from the Cosmopolitan Club of Saskatoon, and was conducted by the composer.

Following are the complete programs:

MAY 6—EDMONTON SYMPHONY

Lee Heppner, conductor
Symphony No. 6, second movement.....Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 4, finale.....Mendelssohn
Kaleidoscope.....Pierre Mercure

MAY 13—REGINA SYMPHONY

John Thornicroft, conductor
French Military March.....Saint-Saens
Overture, Orpheus in Hades.....Offenbach
Excerpts, Der Rosenkavalier.....R. Strauss
Mazurka from "Coppelia".....Delibes

MAY 20—CALGARY SYMPHONY

Polovtsian Dances.....Borodin

MAY 27 SASKATOON SYMPHONY

Murray Adaskin, conductor
Nine Love Songs.....Brahms
(with soprano Margaret Ready, the University Singers directed by Austin Clarkson, and pianist Walter Thiesen.)
Summer Suite.....Robert Fleming
(premiere performance, conducted by the composer.)

Trans-Canada Matinee Moves to Winnipeg

Trans-Canada Matinee will originate out of Winnipeg during May. Paul Wright will be producer; Margaret Prang will comment daily on the news; baritone Kerr Wilson will be heard three times weekly on the musical portion of the program (alternating with Toronto pianist Mary Syme); and Marian Waldman will read excerpts from Street of Riches by the St. Boniface-born novelist Gabrielle Roy.

Margaret Prang, who has been heard on the news commentary portion of Matinee before, is a graduate of the University of Manitoba who is now lecturing in history there.

Kerr Wilson, who will be accompanied by Mitchell Parks, will be heard this week in English traditional songs arranged by H. Lane Wilson (Monday), Canadian songs arranged by Richard Johnston (Wednesday), and popular show tunes (Friday).

Street of Riches is the story of a French-Canadian family living in an unnamed western suburb, presumably the author's native St. Boniface, and of a child, Christine, in particular. Actress Marian Waldman has adapted the daily readings.

Regular Matinee features (Matinee Quiz, At the U.N., etc.) will continue to be heard from their usual origination points during the program's stay in Winnipeg.

"The India I Saw"

A series of three Post-News talks
this week on radio

In a series of three Post-News Talks this week, Alec Laidlaw, who recently returned from India where he was an advisor in adult education under the Colombo Plan, tells of The India I Saw.

His first talk (Monday) sub-titled Space versus People, deals with India's population. "If you visited a different Indian village every day," says Laidlaw, "it would take you 2,000 years to see them all."

In his talk on Tuesday, sub-titled Changing the Village, he describes his own work in India and the government's co-operative development program which has inaugurated a new system of co-operative finance along with modern teaching in agriculture and health and a modern education program for village schools.

The final talk (Thursday), sub-titled The Three Indias, describes how three different aspects of the country are merging to produce a great nation.

toba reservations is acute: 10 years ago the Indian population of Winnipeg was estimated at about 300; today it is over 1,800. Commentator is Frazer Earle, secretary of the Manitoba branch of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, who as a social scientist has been involved in studies concerning the status of the Indian in Manitoba.

The program follows Johnny Wolf, a Cree from the Peguis Reserve, through his first three days in the city, from his arrival at the bus station, through his early impressions of the city, the assistance of his sister, who has been able to adapt herself to city life, his finding of friends—other Indians like himself—on "Main Street," the city's breeding-ground for crime, through his first day's work and his choice of a place to live.

"The Case of Posterity vs. Joseph Howe"

A repeat performance of Joseph Schull's two-part four-hour historical drama May 7 and 14 on CBC Wednesday Night

The CBC's chronicle of the life of Joseph Howe, "the great Nova Scotian," first presented a little over two years ago in two two-hour sections on consecutive Wednesday Nights, will be repeated in the same form and with many of the same players on May 7 and 14, on CBC Wednesday Night. Once again producer J. Frank Willis will have Alexander R. Webster in the title role, in presenting this monumental script which was two years in preparation and represents an original job of historical research by the writer, Joseph Schull of Montreal.

A few months after the original radio production a "dramatic argument" written for television from the same material was presented under the title The Case of Posterity versus Joseph Howe. The complete radio script is being repeated, Willis says, because of its importance and because of the strong, favourable response of listeners two years ago. Songs and ballads of Nova Scotia, arranged by Richard Johnston and with narration by Helen Creighton, will be heard on both evenings, immediately before the Howe chronicle begins.

Joseph Schull, writing in CBC Times two years ago, helped to set the scene: "In one tremendous appearance before a court in Halifax, Howe smashed through the age-old crust of colonial maladministration which was stifling a province. He let loose the anger of a people, and he was the cool, invincibly reasoning voice of that people through the 10-year struggle for responsible government. Two governors departed from the province under the lash of Joe Howe's tongue and pen; but, more important, the same pen poured out such a flood of wide-visioned argument on every phase of colonial relations that even august London was forced to listen and be instructed. Joe Howe had made Nova Scotia, with Nova Scotia's hearty help, a prosperous, loyal, well-governed province long before Confederation was talked of. He might well have hesitated long before accepting the proffered hand of a distracted, stalemated, impecunious Upper Canada.

"Yet there was more than that at the root of it. It was more than the fact that his enemy, Tupper, was leading Nova Scotia into Confedera-

He saw Nova Scotia as an island, separated from a glittering "home" by an easy, comfortable ocean voyage, separated from the drab, half-built centres of Upper Canada by 700 miles of savage rock and bush. He could not in his heart awaken any enthusiasm for the idea of this raw, problematical nation stretching away endlessly to the west. He looked east. He saw in his vision Nova Scotia drawn even closer to the motherland, sending her representatives to an Imperial Parliament which would receive men of all the colonies and legislate for all the colonies. He heard the voice of Joseph Howe answering the voices of Russell and Gladstone and Disraeli across the floor of the House of Commons. It was an Imperial ambition, and Imperial dream, and very few would say, in comparing his speeches with the run of speeches in the House of Commons, that he had not every right to dream it. It was his tragedy, though certainly not his shame, that his dream was not in accordance with the pattern which history was unfolding."

The first two-hour section of the script covers the period of Howe's rise up to 1848, when the first responsible government in the Empire outside Britain took office in Halifax; it is called The Tribune of the People; the second part, next week, will cover the remainder of Howe's life, to his death in 1873 when he was lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia. It takes its title from Sir John A. Macdonald's epithet: "That Pestilent Fellow Howe."

Historical figures in the script include Howe's wife; Thomas Chandler Haliburton, creator of "Sam Slick;" Attorney-general S.G.W. Archibald; Lord Russell, the Colonial Secretary; Chief Justice Haliburton; Lord Sydenham, the Governor-General; and three successive governors of Nova Scotia, Lord Dalhousie, Sir Colin Campbell and Lord Faulkland. The special music is by Philip Nimmons and will be conducted by Samuel Hersenhoren.

Queen After Death

A modern French play this Thursday on "Folio"

Popular legend has it that 601 years ago in historic Coimbra, the body of a murdered woman was taken from its grave, robed in ceremonial clothes and placed upon a throne. A crown was then put upon the dead woman's head and she sat, Queen of Portugal, beside her husband Pedro I. Her body was then interred in a tomb of white marble at Al Cobaca, to which 10 years later, her beloved Pedro followed her.

The Romeo and Juliet story of Pedro and Ines De Castro is the subject of Henri de Montherlant's play Queen After Death, to be produced on CBC Folio by Mario Prizek this Thursday. The roles of Ines and Don Pedro will be played by Kate Reid and Lloyd Bochner. John Drainie is cast as King Ferrante who had his daughter-in-law murdered so that he could make an alliance with Navarre by marrying his son to the Infanta. Frances Hyland will portray the Infanta.

Actually, Ines' exhumation is outside the scope of de Montherlant's play. After sketching the melodramatic situation of the two lovers and the hard-thinking Infanta caught in a web of court intrigue, the play becomes a true tragedy focused on the soul of King Ferrante. De Montherlant's Ferrante is a man of hesitations and vacillations, inner contradictions and inconsistent impulses, who can no more easily decide to murder Ines than Hamlet could decide to kill his uncle. Queen After Death does not reveal an exciting and ingenious plot full of physical action and violent incident; rather it exposes the tragic "interior adventure" of a soul—"a tragedy of good intentions."

Queen After Death was translated from the original French by J. Griffin and Thursday's television adaptation is by the producer, Mario Prizek. A stage adaptation by W. Hansen and R. Astor has been acquired by theatrical producer Warner LeRoy who plans to present it in New York next season. The play is currently in the repertoire of the Comedie Francaise and was given in New York several years ago at the Phoenix Theatre.

The 65-year-old Montherlant exalts the masculine qualities of virility and sensual enjoyment, preaches the virtue of "service" as an end in itself, rejects the consolations of sentiment, especially of feminine tenderness, and seeks to promote a modern chivalry based on solitary pride. His "philosophy" is an amalgam of stoicism, the patrician code of the Roman Empire, sun-worship and physical culture. His attempts to harmonize his love for the body and for violence and action with his love for things of the spirit and for the humility preached by the church have won for him the name of Pagan-Christian.

The religious beliefs that run like a ground-bass even through most of his cynical later works were likely picked up at the Jesuit college of Sainte Croix at Neuilly which he attended from early childhood. Even though he wrote stories at the age of nine he could not be called bookish, and he excelled in sports of all kind. He became fascinated with bull-fighting in his early teens, and at 15 had already taken part in bull-fights in Spain and killed a bull in a corrida.

Queen After Death, which is generally considered his finest play, was first produced at the Comedie Francaise in 1942. His hedonism, pride, anti-feminism, preoccupation with death and scorn for conventional social values have made him many enemies. Yet he remains one of the most highly regarded of French writers by all but the women. When he was gored in a bull-fight shortly after the First Great War an ecstatic letter appeared in the columns of La Femme de France: "What luck! Montherlant, the poseur, has just had his loins ripped by a bull's horns. That's exactly what I wanted for him. Brave little bull!"

Recapturing The Big Band Era

Swing for the people is the theme of the latest CBC Vancouver musical show on radio. The Big Band Show heard Monday nights on CBW, CBK and CBX, features a band led by pianist Doug Parker.

"We want to recapture the music of the forties and early fifties when big bands were popular," says producer Neil Sutherland. Singers with Doug's band will be Frances Jordan, Bob Hughes and the Four Coasters. Bob Switzer will do the announcing.

Vancouver born Doug Parker is well known to Coast and Canadian listeners. He was recently heard in a series on the Trans-Canada network with Vancouver singer Eleanor Collins. Doug, who described by Harry James as the finest pianist he ever had in his band, has a degree in Philosophy and Psychology from UBC. He has been on the road with both Ray Anthony and Harry James but has now settled in Vancouver because "moving around with bands and raising three children don't mix."

The Lost World Of Kalahari

The Lost World of Kalahari — a series of six half-hour films telling the story of an expedition into the Kalahari Desert of Bechuanaland, South Africa—will be presented on CBWT on Sunday afternoons at 2:00 p.m., starting May 4. The series was originally presented by the CBC in October-December, 1956, and is being repeated because of the great interest shown by viewers at that time.

In the films, Colonel Laurens van der Post tells the story of a journey he undertook to fulfil a vow made in his childhood to seek out the remnants of the first men of Africa, the Bushmen, who were reputed still to be living a stone-age existence. His grandfather had led the raid which killed off the last of the Bushmen—all except those who took refuge in the Kalahari. He also brought back with him two of these most primitive Africans, and Laurens van der Post, as a child, was a great friend of these two Bushmen, then old men.

The English poet Stephen Spender, who knows van der Post well, has attempted to explain the charm of this "man with a mission." "The mixture in his make-up of responsible leader with passionate sympathizer for the dark Africa gives him a unique position in our relations with Africans, white and black," Spender says. "The ideas he has developed in his books (Venture to the Interior, Flamingo Feather, The Dark Eye of Africa, etc.)

are basically religious, but they adumbrate a vision which includes the beliefs and dreams of 'primitive man, natural man, who is truly stuff great dreams are worked on.' He has found in the ideas of Jung, the psychologist, a modern European vision which comes closest to his own. . . . He is an important figure because he includes in his own individuality the experience of several cultures. He is not just a European going out to meet 'the natives.' He is burned through by Africa and yet he believes that we have a mission in that stronger fire, just as the primitive also has a mission to restore us. He is a critic who has the right to demand the best of both the white and the black man: 'If we expect the white man in Africa to renounce the corruption of power, we must also expect the black man to hold out against the bitterness provoked by his lack of power.' He is undeniably a man with a message. Although his way of putting it may sometimes confuse and irritate, this message may be more important for us to take notice of, than for him to deliver."

Barney's Gang

Barney's Gang is a new half-hour children's TV show from Vancouver which will include filmed visits by a small group of youngsters to places of interest in and around Vancouver—a riding academy, the airport, a tugboat with a deep-sea diver, etc. The first show will be seen at 4:00 p.m. Friday, May 2 on CBWT. From time to time west-coast Indian legends will be told, with drawings to illustrate them, and there will also be visits from children with unusual hobbies. Comedian-singer Barney Potts will be the master of ceremonies.

for opera in New York failed, and his teaching earned him little, but he continued to write and translate. In 1835 he wrote bitterly, "I, the creator of the Italian language in America, the poet of Josef II (Emperor of Austria), the author of 36 dramas, the inspiration of Mozart, and nearly 90 years old—I have no bread in America." However, this was probably poetic exaggeration, for he neither starved nor was forgotten. He was well known to intellectuals, and for his funeral St. Patrick's Cathedral was filled to overflowing with his friends and admirers.

"THE LAND IS BRIGHT"

reached the Atlantic—then suggested that Lok persuade the English to finance a further expedition. The offer was not taken up.

As it happens, there is an entrance to a Strait close to where Juan de Fuca said it was, which now bears his name. So he may or may not have seen the entrance. But if, in fact, he sailed through the Strait his navigation must have been very bad if he thought that he saw the Atlantic to the east when, in fact, he must have finished up back in the Pacific to the west of his starting point. Historians tend to believe Juan de Fuca's whole story a fake based on a lucky fluke.

Less mythical is Drake's voyage up the west coast to perhaps as far as the 43rd degree of latitude in 1579. The Spanish, though occasionally venturing up the coast from Mexico thought themselves secure in the Papal Bull of 1499 which gave them the whole of the Pacific west coast. But the Spanish did not know that for years, bands of wandering Cossacks had been forging across Siberia from Russia until they finally reached the northern Pacific. In 1724, a Dane called Vitus Bering, employed by Peter the Great of Russia, set out from the Siberian coast in small boats and began exploring the coast of what is now known as Alaska. Though Bering himself died on one of his expeditions, the Russians soon set up fur trading and trapping posts on North American shores where fur seal, seal otter and blue fox were plentiful.

Then came Captain James Cook, the famous British explorer, who was probably the first man to spend any time on what is now the British Columbian coast. In March, 1778, Captain Cook landed at Nootka Sound and spent some weeks repairing his ships and trading with the Indians. Later, when Cook's ships reached China, they traded their skins to the Chinese and the three way trade—Europe to the Pacific North-west to China—was soon bringing ships from Britain, France, the United States and elsewhere.

Though Cook's voyage had virtually proved the non-existence of the Strait of Anian the tradition died hard and for many years people were still looking for what was now called the Northwest Passage. And it was still for the purpose of blocking any such passage that the Spanish kept coming back with men like Martinez and Quadra. By the early 1790's, however, following the Nootka Sound Convention which settled many of the differences between England and Spain, the trade struggle was becoming mainly one between the English and the Americans.

The last of the great coastal explorers were Captain George Vancouver who sailed the inside passage between the mainland and Vancouver Island—making first mention, incidentally, of Ripple Rock—and mapped much of the coastline.

By the 1800's, exploration of the Pacific Northwest was being concentrated on the overland routes from Canada. But that is another story, one of the many which will be told on The Land is Bright.

Animals Stars of Faraway Look

Old Man Kangaroo is the star of this week's film in the BBC series Faraway Look, seen at 4:00 p.m., Mondays on CBWT.

Some of the filming for this program was done at the Kangaroo Research Station in Australia where problems affecting the kangaroo population are being studied. Just as birds are ringed for future observation and then released, kangaroos are also marked for future identification. One of the most interesting parts of the film is a night scene where, under the glare of searchlights, the kangaroo is seen passing a trap gate, releasing both a spray of colour on himself and a counter.

The series starts April 28 when frilly lizards, cockatoos, buffalo, frogs, pigmy geese and magpie geese will be seen in their natural settings in the Darwin region of Australia.

Peter Scott toured Australia, New Zealand, New Guinea, Fiji, and Hawaii collecting natural history film footage for the series. Other programs in the series, which continues until June 2, will show the octopus, the bird of paradise, tree kangaroos, the royal albatross, the penguin, the ganet, and the "takahe," a nearly extinct bird of New Zealand.
